| BIG IDEA    | Jesus didn't simply restore Peter—He redefined the mission. Our faith was never meant to become a routine religion, but a life-giving relationship with Jesus that moves us toward people who need hope.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| MAIN POINTS | Jesus Calls Us From Religion to Relationship Before Peter would lead the Church, Jesus reminded him that following Him isn't about rules—it begins with relationship. Jesus Moves Us From Routine to Mission A genuine relationship with Jesus naturally overflows into caring for others. We don't just attend church—we become part of God's mission. Jesus Challenges our Faith To Becomes Real and Move From Our Head to Our Heart The sermon challenged us to ask whether our faith is simply something we know or something we actually live. Relationship with Jesus changes our priorities, our generosity, our conversations, and our willingness to invite others. |
